The object of this communication was to describe the general principle of a system of ore dressing, devised and pai in practice in the copper mines of the Bristol Mining Company in Connecticat, under the direction of Mr. Silliman. The main features of this system are, (1) the perfect separation of the fluor portions of the product of stamping and crushing (company in the product of stamping and crushing (company the product of stamping and crushing (company) to the product of stamping and crushing light directly to one stamped over, which has hitherto been incapable of this mode of treatment. (3.) The adoption of such mechanical arrangements as have rendered the whole process of ore dressing one continuous and self sustaining system, in which human labor bears an exceedingly small ratio to the results obtained, compared with any speak hitherto devised. In this strip exclusively by refuse material-ring water, without handling. Sille the ore is brought up to the highest mecanille per centage, however poor the original or may be,—no appreciable quantity of it escaping in the waste.

Variation is a characteristic of all things finite, and is involved in the very conditions of existence. No substance can be wholly independent of every or any other body in the universe. Liability to variation is part of the law of species. The law of variableness is as much an expression of the fundamental qualities of the species in organic as in ignorganic mature, and it should be the great aim of science to invastigate it for every species. Variations are not secidents, for nothing in nature is secidental; they are profound laws, and often betray trachs which would otherwise never is susjected. The limits of variation it was difficult to define, but the acismific world need not despair of finding them est. Adjourned.
